No Further, he did not believe a single man from the slave States could look him in the open of say that the South hed not had its full there in the control of the Gavernment. In fact she had had more than her just shere in proportion to her population. No one time uses to blame for what the South complained of hut those who had the Government under their control. The Senater from Gorgle at one time talks of the beauty and prosperity of the Southern States—now these whinings and compleints of eggression and secession are culirely out of place. At one time their prosperity and happiness is their pride and heast, and the text moment ruin stares them in the fabe. The Senator from Gorgle had easid is tones of arger and with despart denieted on his face that the Southern on this side of the cham her wers enemies to the country and must not be placed in power, and talked of tearing down the pilare of the temple of liberty and overwhelming all lle would now proceed to review some of the arguinents end some of the vituperations of that speech. He acknowledged the Senator as one of the the said of him as of another noted individual, "he failed where Sutan could not etand."

The charges against Porthen Senators of perjury and cowardice grated harshy on his edge-particularly the latter charge. Did the Senator believe it is did, from the license of his lenguage—if he thought they were all non-combinante, he etill would not believe tuat the Cenator wished to gain a cheap reputation for valor at their expense. It was known to everybody that the Northern people were opened to duelling as a relic of harbarism, and that to every bedy that the Northern people were opposed to duelling as a relic of harbarism, and that a man who had practiced it at the North was deprived of all effices of honor, trust, and profit, and looked upon as a criminal, and thrown cut of secity. He had felt that that eentiment, righteone as it was, had exposed them lo insult from those who construed forbearance into want of couragn.

RMF. Fitch supposed that Mr. Wads spoke for the people of his own party in his secion. Mr. Wade represe to he spoke what he believed the centiment of the Northern people of marally, but there might be exceptions. The Senator from translab had charged the Northern people with helpg destitute of courage, yet when did they disgrace the his even a duarter-dock or finch in the parillous literach.

Mr. Toomits said he had not made each allegations against the Northern people, hit had said that these who had proved fitthless to their honorable obligations and talked of marghing their millionageness the Northern people, hit had said that these who had proved fitthless to their honorable obligations and talked of marghing their millionageness the Northern people, hit had said that these who had proved fitthless to their honorable obligations and talked of marghing their millionageness the Northern people, hit had said that there who had proved fitthless to their honorable of Northern peoples with beginning their millionageness the Northern people with help of Groton, 125; Sinus B Comize of Northern people with help of Groton, 125; Sinus B Comize of Northern people with help of Northern peop Mr. Wade said he hed put a broader construction on the Senator's language than he (Toombs) placed upon it, and was glad to hear his explanation. He believed, himself, that a men who would reelly mmit perjury was likely to be destitute of cour go. He believed with the people of his section that duelling was unnecessery in eivilized conntries, but it might be necessary in a semi barbarcus region and emong a semi-barbarous people.

The Senator from Georgia had accused Northern Senators with being faithless to their constitutional obligations and that they bud perfured themselves by violating their oaths. The Senator who atterd these charges had told us that one blact from Virsiania would rally a million of then, to do what? The Aprican Stave Teans.—The New York Times has correspondence from St. Paul de Lando, on the west count of Africa, sa late as the 20th of December, which establishes beyond doubt the fact that a rigorous trade in man-stealing is proceduled on that censel by Amorican vessels. Much ignorance prevaile at home is relation to the Irue etate of affairs on the const. The pulm oil trade is supposed to be in a highly flouristing condition. We are told that the competition between English and American marchants to obtain possersion of this trade is so great that they are almost ready to cut each other's throats in thair eagar does not run one another off the coae; and that it is the policy of England, through ber navy, is annoy American vessels so much that they are almost come for oil. This opinion is wholly false.

In the first place, there are faw or no English months we have seen but oae; while, in the seame period, wa have ancountered dezens of pretended American oil traders. The English officers know of but three English legal traders on the elave coast. Again, the vessels we have examined have ganerally been cleared from New York for a period of seven to nine months, while, under favorable circum staccas, nearly two years or more would be required to fill the large casks they have, as the oil is obtained slowly, and in email quantities at a time.

as we are if frended by userchartestero. Moreover, these vessels leave. New York with the bolds filled with water cares, full of teeth water, neder the pretance of carrying he water for bullarl, and on the coast pumping out the water and filing them with oil. Now, water-casks are doil-casks are two differe t things, and the legal tradere have told not that the oil-casks come out in staves, are put to gether bere, and previous to being filled with oil, are white-washed inside and outside.

The vessels engaged in that trade, in addition to the above named nrticles, carry large quantities of calico prints, crockery, rum, i.e., with which to pay for tha slaves. Being clearcd, with papers all correct, i.e., and oftentimus a Portuguese or Spanish superearge and a foreign captain, they make boldly for the point on the coast to which they are bound, atay a few days, and then proceed, undor cover of trading, from point to point—slave depot to slave dopot—along ibo coast, engage the earge, pay for it, and proceed to sea, until the time agreed upon fur picking up the slaves. On the night determined upon, they sail cautiously, yet boldly, in—anchor, and in two or three hours are filled with negroes, who are carried off to them in cances. The refractory ones are clapped in irons, or made drunk with rum, and in this stupefied condition thay are carried aboard, stowed in a sitting posturo, with the knees drawn up so closely that they can hardly breathe, much less move.

The lettar from which we have quoted suggests that the only way to euppress this abominable traffic by American vessels is the enactment of a law providing that "any vessel found on the western coast of Africa, under American colors, carrying the continued to the providers of the mediant of the providers of the mediant of the providers of the mediant of the leaves of the providers of the mediant of the
